Human love:

When love is human, material things do not obstruct it. When it is not, it becomes selfishness and counterfeit affection. We must understand the difference between human love and its absence, and why natural love is fundamental to human happiness. Human love connects with free, fidelity, and peace. When love is not human, it is limited to material interest on the part of the woman or physical interest on the part of the man. That produces suffering, not happiness. People live in fear because the relationship is built on lies and self-interest, not real human love. The peace of true love exists only when love is human to human that is, between a man and a woman. When love is not human, material concerns and economic status constantly distort the relationship, causing breakups and divorces. Consider this example: A man loses everything and is ignored by a woman he courted with sincere human love. Later, when he recovers his wealth, the same woman pursues him again. That is not human love. Likewise, when a man focuses on a woman's figure her breasts, hips, or waist and not on her feelings, it is not human love. If the woman loses her physique or gains weight and the man responds with arguments, infidelity, or verbal and physical abuse aimed at ending the relationship, he never loved her as a human being. He loved only her body. That is why love must be based on human feelings and human traits. A woman should be drawn to a man's smile, personality, voice, eyes, gait, gaze, intelligence, hygiene, and other qualities he will not lose. A man should value a woman's eyes, facial beauty, smile, naturalness, walk, style of dress, voice, way of making love, humility, and other qualities she will not lose. These are permanent. That is human love. When love is rooted in what is permanent, true happiness and peace of mind follow, because love is mental. Divorces and breakups decline. Feelings of human love are deeply intimate, expressing them directly is often a mistake because it can reduce emotional intensity and create risk.

If one party is dishonest, that party can exploit the other's true feelings to obtain money, material goods, ridicule, blackmail, or to threaten a breakup and cause emotional harm. The better way to demonstrate true love is through logical signs or natural jealousy. Jealousy is not possessiveness; it is the fear of losing human love, which is the most difficult thing to lose because love is individual. The true way to protect human love is to keep it private. For example: if you love her nose, say you love her mouth. In this way, human love remains intimate. Deliberately provoking jealousy leads to breakups. When both partners pretend they are not afraid of losing each other, they feign strength out of pride. That is a mistake. The right approach is for one partner to yield if both truly love each other. In yielding, they show how much love exists. If a man pursues a woman but she does not love him as a human being, she should say no from the beginning rather than accept him out of pity. The same applies if a woman pursues a man. Refusing early prevents heartbreak, disappointment, and breakups later. With single parents, the mentality of the opposite sex is often deceptive. If a single mother has kept her body, many men seek only sexual relations. The man, who is not the biological father, is constantly reminded by the children that another man came before him. That truth torments him. He may stay for a time for sex, then leave, causing disappointment and suffering. The dynamic is similar with single fathers. A woman may feel uncomfortable pretending to love another woman's children. Over time, resentment can grow. She may mistreat the children because she is not their mother. The children feel hated by their father, especially when he loves the woman more than them. True human love is almost always possible when each person has only one partner. Human love prevents children from having fraudulent stepparents and eliminates the suffering caused by outside parties. When love is truly human and secure, a permanent family with authentic parents can be created. All suffering ends with human love. For single parents to achieve true love, both partners should have children from past relationships. Since both understand the experience, discomfort is reduced. The probability of human love and mental happiness increases, and the thought "I will never be happy" disappears.

If one partner dies due to accident or illness, the breakup is understandable, though the survivor becomes a single parent. Proactive health measures are vital: foster mutual support, maintain healthy eating habits to lower cancer incidence, and refrain from high-risk activities that may result in death. Men and women often think heterosexual relationships are just about sex. That is not true. It is uncommon for men to feel sexually used by women; it is more common for women to experience that false sense of being used. The physical differences between men and women are the true physical happiness of human love. Bodies, being physical, exist for making love, not merely for having sex. Sex is direct, and being too direct subtracts emotion from intimacy. This contributes to the collapse of relationships. Women sometimes have sex with men after receiving material gifts to feel silently compensated. That is a grave mistake and contributes to relationship failure. Sex is natural with or without gifts because it is human sex. Ignoring the truth of human love is a form of silent prostitution rooted in ignorance. Not knowing each other leads to divorce and failed courtships. Men often associate everything with sex in silence. A woman should know this and not discuss it, because a man will always deny it out of shame. A man's mind is naturally connected to sexual desire. This benefits women because when a woman feels genuine desire, she will never lack sexual fulfillment. In human love, there is never "sex" as a separate act, or if there is, it is rare. Because it is human love, love is made as often as desired daily, weekly, or monthly. Sexual intimacy should never be planned. Planning removes the emotion of anticipation. Maintain responsible hygiene so you are ready when the moment arises. Sexual invitations should not be planned; planning removes emotion. The correct way is through signals. Men can wear clothing that subtly draws attention and generates sexual interest. Women desire these signals but will not request them out of modesty, because it is unnatural to tell a man about her desires. The communicative functions of female ornamentation attire, cosmetics, and hairstyling are well documented. Male sexual interest reliably corresponds to such displays. Nevertheless, the efficacy of these signals is contingent upon autonomous presentation. A display produced on request lacks status as an authentic signal.

Physical evidence of human love:

True love is heterosexual. Other arrangements are counterfeit imitations of it. True heterosexual love means both partners are comfortable on two levels: physical and emotional. Life is physical, and the physical matters because it creates visual happiness. Feelings are internal and silent; only spoken expression reveals them. Therefore, honesty is essential, because it is the only way to know each partner's true feelings.

Beginning of the past:

Pure love without lies endures because partners share an optimistic vision for the future. The mind allows couples to project forward from the present, because genuine love is a feeling that remains active regardless of circumstance. Meaningful memories of the past remain accessible, sustaining love in the present and carrying it into the future. For couples who prioritize intimacy, Sundays hold a distinct place. The pace shifts and intimacy unfolds naturally. Saturdays serve a different function for most people: they are for rest and recovery. That is why those two days feel different compared to the rest of the week.
